STUDENTS NEED OUR HELP NOW

Scholarship Funds Are a Meaningful Philanthropic Vehicle

Education may be the key to success, but dwindling college scholarships are having a devastating effect on students and families who need financial support to access higher education. Deep budget cuts and increased tuition at California's public colleges and universities are making college unaffordable for many students. Average undergraduate fees at Cal State rose this school year to nearly $4,900, not counting books, transportation and housing costs, which can add $10,000 more. Basic undergraduate fees at UC schools next fall will be about $10,302 a year, a 32 percent increase; room, board, books and additional campus-based charges could add $17,000 more. Community colleges have increased fees 30 percent from $20 to $26 per credit.

The bleak economy has also forced scholarship providers — to severely cut back or cancel their support. ACT, a nonprofit that manages and designs scholarship programs for foundations and companies, has seen a decline of nearly 5 percent in total scholarship dollars available.

In addition, students are dropping out of college because they can't balance going to school and working to support themselves, according to a recent report by Public Agenda, a nonpartisan research group. About 7 in 10 dropouts said they had no scholarship or loan aid. Among those who got degrees, only 4 in 10 went without aid.

Experts say dropout rates are hurting U.S. global competitiveness, with the U.S. ranked only 10th in the percentage of young adults (ages 25 to 34) with college degrees, according to Scholarship America.

Why are scholarship funds an effective charitable vehicle?

JW: If you set up an endowment, it’s a gift that is going to give every year in perpetuity. Educating a student is the greatest gift you can give to somebody. It’s a great investment. My philosophy is this: if you educate a person, you can never take somebody’s education away, and you’re helping that person succeed anywhere, not just in the U.S.

Why was the Venice High School Alumni Scholarship Fund established at CCF in 1992?

JW: The alumni association started the scholarship program about 40 years ago. We just had the funds in a bank account and once we reached $250,000, the organization decided it needed to have someone else manage the funds for us. We did our research and came across CCF, which was local, in existence for a long time (since 1915) and had a stellar reputation. That solidified our choice to move all our funds over.

How does the Venice High School Alumni Scholarship Fund work?

JW: We give college scholarships to Venice High School seniors. In April, the guidance counselors at Venice High send out letters to every graduating senior to let them know about the scholarships. They have to fill out a questionnaire and write an essay and provide income information. They have to have a minimum grade point average of 2.5. We’re trying to help families in which their child may be the first student to go to college. We also look at the student’s financial need and school service. With the input of college counselors, we also take into consideration whether they think the student is going to follow through with their education. Based on the fund’s investment performance, we give out an average of 5 percent per year. In summer 2009, we gave out $121,500 in scholarships to 33 students.

Who selects the scholarship winners?

JW: We have a committee of about 10 people that includes guidance counselors, teachers and board members. We meet once a year and there is a lot of discussion. We reduce the bias by having board members there who ask a lot of questions.

Your biggest donor was the late Fred J. Aves, whose scholarship fund at CCF is the largest one administered. How involved was he with your fund?

JW: Mr. Aves was a Venice High School graduate. He was a self-made man who made his fortune from real estate investments and manufacturing businesses. He made all the donations to our fund while he was alive on an anonymous basis. He gave us suggested criteria, but he never gave us requirements. Today we give out three Aves scholarships for students attending vocational school. (Note: In 1998, inventor Fred J. Aves left $9.1 million of his estate to CCF to support young people pursuing vocational careers through scholarships from the Fred J. Aves Vocational Education Fund.)

Are there any lessons learned that you can pass on to others who are considering a scholarship fund?

JW: To avoid problems and make the process unbiased, we document our requirements for scholarships. We also have a requirement that students awarded scholarships have to attend the award ceremony. We believe that if someone gives you money to go to college, you should show up and shake their hand.

How would you describe your experience with CCF?

JW: Very positive. CCF is a very professional organization. It is well informed on any changes in law relating to scholarships, it keeps us on track and keeps us informed about what it is doing. CCF is a very multifaceted organization, very cost effective and it’s local. That’s why my client, Walter Holiday, who is deceased, left his estate to CCF. His fund will feed the very poor.

If your clients are interested in supporting students through a scholarship fund, here is an example of a medical student who won scholarships from two funds at CCF.

Norma Sanchez vividly recalls the frustration at age 9 of waiting six hours in the emergency room for her younger brother to be treated for a high fever. That experience was one of many that influenced her decision to become a doctor. As the only English speaker in her family, Sanchez grew up helping her parents navigate the health care and educational systems by scheduling medical appointments and meetings involving her younger brother Oscar’s special education.

Today, at age 29, she is in her second year of medical school at UCLA and has her sights set on becoming a general practitioner. Her career path recently got a boost when she was awarded a scholarship from the Robert C. Fraser Fund, the largest restricted scholarship fund at CCF. It focuses on graduate students pursuing a medical career at UCLA and USC, and also provides grants to doctors who work in underserved communities to help them repay their educational loans.

Sanchez’s $15,000 scholarship, renewable for three years, couldn’t come at a better time. “It really takes the pressure off and I don’t have to stress out about finances,” said Sanchez, who in high school won a Warren Christopher scholarship, which is another CCF fund. “It will especially help with test prep books, textbooks and other materials, and I won’t have to take out more loans.”

“Scholarships are one of those awards that change your life, change the trajectory,” she said. “They helped me believe that I could do all the things it takes to carry out my dreams.”

CONVERTING AN UNUSED VACATION CONDO TO CHARITABLE GIVING

A retired couple had a small vacation condo in the desert. When they began having grandchildren, they wanted to spend more time in Los Angeles, leaving their condo unused. Selling the property would expose them to a $300,000 gain, so their advisor suggested that they donate it and create a Donor Advised Fund. Here’s how this gift worked to the clients’ benefit:*

With a $1.5 million investment in census outreach over 10 months, the California Community Foundation is engaging nonprofits in innovative outreach and convening key stakeholders to assist in getting an accurate census count in L.A. County in 2010. Government agencies use census counts to allocate funds at the state, county and municipal levels, so it is important to ensure that every person gets counted. CCF’s cohort of 12 grantees has initiated creative solutions and shared best practices to dispel myths surrounding the census and to encourage participation. Many communities fear, for instance, that the government may misuse information collected in the census. In addition, few know that the census form has been trimmed down to 10 simple questions — the shortest census form in its history.

Grantee Mexican American Legal Defense & Educational Fund (MALDEF) and nonprofit partner Voto Latino are reaching out to Latino youth via a cell phone game, the “Census Challenge.” Users take an online pledge to be counted, and then tap others to take the pledge, too. They can track their progress via an interactive virtual tool and participants can win prizes from Voto Latino’s census partners, including Apple and MTV. CCF recently received a grant from the John S. and James L. Knight Foundation for this project.

“Given the high use of cell phones among Latinos, the L.A. County mobile phone census application will provide Latinos with accurate, instant bilingual information about the importance of participating in the census,” said Voto Latino Executive Director Maria Teresa Kumar.

Los Angeles County has more than 4.4 million residents living in “hard-to-count” areas, more than 2.5 times the number of any other county in the nation. The most severely undercounted populations are Los Angeles’ ethnically diverse, low-income and homeless residents.
