REMOVAL DEFENSE RESOURCE BANK

Staff developed an online resource bank that is available to law clerk trainees, pro bono attorneys and LAJF attorneys. The bank contains webinars, resources, an LAJF training calendar and key materials on substantive immigration law and removal defense practice.

JUDICIAL DATABASE

Hosted on the Removal Defense Resource Bank, the Judicial Database serves as a space for LAJF attorneys to submit and share their court experiences with other attorneys, contribute collective knowledge and benefit from collective experience. Having access to this information helps attorneys prepare for hearings and supports high caliber removal defense practice.

REMOVAL DEFENSE RESOURCE DOCKET SCREENING PROJECT

The goal of this project is to leverage law student volunteer hours by having law students observe master calendar docket to identify detained individuals who may be in need of pro bono representation.

HELP FOR IMMIGRANTS FACING DEPORTATION

Ensuring Justice Through the Right To Counsel

More than two-thirds of people appearing in immigration court do so without any legal representation, some as young as three years old. Representation matters: studies have shown immigrants who have lawyers are five times more likely to be released from detention and to succeed in challenges to their deportation, with many obtaining permanent relief.

One to two-year grants were awarded to nonprofit legal service providers who are providing direct legal representation. These organizations have procedures for determining who to serve, based on the eligibility criteria and requirements established by project partners.

Public funds are exclusively set aside for direct representation. While philanthropic dollars are being leveraged to fund organizations building the overall capacity, providing technical assistance and training, and data collection and evaluation to build a stronger infrastructure around removal defense services.
