TOP ADVISOR GLOWACKI:
How to Find Your Client's Passion

Michael Glowacki of The Glowacki Group, LLC, sees himself as a coach and advisor to his high net worth clients. Because life and wealth-related decision making is so complex, he talks about how important it is to discover your client’s passion.

CCF: How do you connect your clients to their philanthropic passions?
MG: “Our approach to working with clients combines coaching and advising. We call it The Capital Confidant Approach. We developed this approach after witnessing too many clients working with advisors and attorneys on the wrong problems, issues and strategies that were not in sync with what they told us that they wanted in their lives. Our senior advisors are trained coaches as well as financial and tax professionals. As coaches we listen to our clients’ life stories, how they were raised, their values, religion, level of spiritual intensity, their chosen careers, education, how they spend their time, what they read and their hobbies. The seed of their passions and fulfillment are buried in their stories and experiences. It is less about identifying their passions and more about what is needed to nourish them so that they feel morally complete. “ is a big fan of donor advised funds (DAFs). Here’s why:

“Donor advised funds offer one of the best ways for clients to time tax deductions without giving up control over their money. So, if a client has a windfall year of taxable income pushing them into the maximum tax brackets, they can increase their tax deductions to absorb much of the income (up to 50 percent) saving taxes.”

“As a Certified Public Accountant, I appreciate a DAF because it simplifies the client’s record keeping. A client can make one contribution to their DAF and that’s all that they ever have to account for on their tax return. With the increased record keeping required by the IRS, if 100 gifts are made from the DAF, the client does not have to get 100 pieces of substantiation, the DAF administrator handles all that.”

“They can take a tax deduction in the current year but defer what charities to direct the money to future years when they may have a clearer idea of what charities they care about.”

What sets CCF apart from other entities that offer DAFs?

“The ability to research charitable opportunities in the Los Angeles community. The depth of the CCF staff to guide a client’s charitable intentions to the charities that best support the causes they believe in.”
Remembering CCF in an Estate Plan

By Ed Mullen

Perhaps your clients are feeling pinched these days, but they still want to make a difference by giving in the future to a cause that is important to them.

The simplest way to do that is to include CCF in an estate plan, leaving an outright bequest to the foundation upon death through a will or revocable trust. This outright bequest can consist of any form of property (i.e., cash, securities, real estate and collectibles). An outright bequest can be a specific amount of money, a designated item of property, a certain percentage of the estate or the residue, or part of the residue, of the estate.

When your clients name CCF as a beneficiary in their estate plans, they become members of CCF’s Legacy Society, a premier group of donors whose philanthropic work will help make Los Angeles County a better place to live. Legacy Society members are recognized in our annual report and other publications, as well as at special events held in their honor.

I am always available to discuss estate planning opportunities and concerns with you and your clients. Contact me today at (213) 413-4130.

Stock, Property Gifts Up

CCF donors contributed $35.6 million in stock or property from July 1, 2008 through March 31, 2009, up 44.5% compared with the same period in 2007-08.

Support Basic Needs Today

Thanks to the generosity of our donors, CCF has raised more than $233,000 from two funds that support basic needs in our community. Including CCF’s match, we raised a total of $85,525 for the Share the Joy Fund, which benefits the Los Angeles Regional Food Bank.

An article about the Pass it Along (Acts of Kindness) Fund last month in the Los Angeles Times Magazine generated donations of $147,726 from new and existing donors. The fund supports individuals in need of emergency financial help. To donate, go to www.calfund.org.

Partnerships and collaboration are the best way to respond to the acute demand for social services, funders agreed in a meeting to discuss how they could work together to respond to the economic and housing crisis in Los Angeles County.

The meeting of 14 funders in January was sponsored by the California Community Foundation, the Weingart Foundation and United Way of Greater Los Angeles.

“The vast majority of funding comes from government,” said Antonia Hernández, president and CEO of the California Community Foundation. “Philanthropy is the entrepreneurial arm. How can we use our limited dollars to help? Through partnerships and collaboration. That’s how we can make an impact.”

Recommendations from the meeting:

- Collectively advocate at the state and national levels that all these problems are connected and have a ripple effect.

- Use the crisis as an opportunity and question basic assumptions about how things are done in human services.

  Example: programs for homelessness deal with the symptoms rather than “the glue,” such as case management.

- Fund areas of innovation and research and come up with alternatives.
In the aftermath of the market meltdown, risk remains unusually high — but so, too, is the opportunity set. We believe that the best strategy at this time is one that has elements to play it both ways, being partly defensive for capital preservation, but also opportunistic to take advantage of the current dislocations in the markets (especially in various segments of the bond markets).

While some charitable giving techniques have lost their luster in the current environment, there has not been a better time to consider a non-grantor charitable lead annuity trust to also achieve estate tax planning goals. This is the result of the current low rate (2.6 percent hurdle rate for April) and the potential for asset appreciation, as well as the threat of limited charitable deductions and higher tax rates in the future.

Keep focused on the larger aspects of life: cultivating good character, keeping the integrity of being yourself and working to maintain a cheerful attitude despite setbacks. Life is a gift and it’s good to remind ourselves of that every day. These troubles may last awhile, and we should remember that each of us has ongoing riches in our family, friends and business relationships.

Recognize the paradigm shift in our industry from traditional advice that has an investment management bias to an approach that understands that clients are looking for holistic, integrated advice that reflects near and longer-term concerns. Too often, clients’ asset allocations do not reflect their real time horizon, a deficiency that is hidden in up markets, but has been highlighted by the current market environment.

It’s important to discuss with clients their own sense of financial security, and whether the amounts and priorities in their estate plan continue to make sense. For those who are in a position to do so, now is a great time to make loans to family members and gifts (either outright or using techniques such as charitable lead trusts) to take advantage of today’s low interest rates and depressed asset values.
